AFROCOLOMBIAN & INDIGENOUS	The goal of this instrument is to enhance the capacity of Afro-Colombian and indigenous communities in targeted rural and urban areas to improve their socio-economic, cultural and political conditions. This program will utilize an integrated participatory methodology that responds to the specific needs of these ethnic and geographically diverse communities. While the program responds to particular Afro-Colombian and indigenous issues, other USAID programs, such as the Human Rights Program, will continue to support these populations through their goals and objectives. USAID's new policy initiative will advocate for Afro-Colombian and indigenous concerns by providing technical assistance on national policy and legislative issues, such as land tenure. The Vulnerable Populations Assistance Objective will assist Afro-Colombians and indigenous who are affected by the conflict. COMPETITIVE RURAL ENTERPRISES	The CRE mechanism will capitalize on USAID's substantial investment in key agricultural sectors since 2003 by transitioning from extensive on-the-ground investment to sector-level support. Based on the design of the current specialty coffee 'CAFES' program, the mechanism will work with cacao, caucho, African Palm, specialty coffee, forestry and other sector-level entities in order to consolidate major advances in these sectors throughout the country. Small producer participation success in these sectors is fundamental to Colombia's rural competitiveness and therefore essential to GOC and USG alternative development goals. This instrument will also complement CSDI regional programming, as many of these sectors are the strategic productive crops in the regions. It is particularly important that USAID remains engaged in these sectors to further support the small producer alliances successfully instituted with the ADAM and MIDAS programs. While support for some of these sectors is arguably well established and organized in terms of field support, many of these sectors continue to favor large producers over small farmers both in terms of technical assistance and commercialization.
